

Looking back at your first semester at SDSU, are you satisfied with your performance? If not, what would you change?

Adjust to the style of class rooms (really large with no one-on-one work)

better grades

better time management

choose too much major classes

Everything I didn't do so well

Find a way to get more money.

Get better grades.

Go to all classes

Half and half. I took one class that I did not do well in (as well as the majority of the students in that class) that I was not satisfied with.

I always expect more from myself. I would try to find someone to watch my child more so I can dedicate more time to studying.

I could've improved my GPA. I also want to be more involved on campus and get an internship.

i couldve put more effort on studying

I need to be able to handle stress/anxiety better.

I need to cut my work hours.

I need to focus more.

I need to study more, read more, and manage my time efficiently.

I need to study smarter. I spent a lot of time just reading the chapters.

I spent a lot of time studying but it did not seem to pay off. I think I would talk to the professors more to see what the exams will be like and what they expect.

I think i can do better than that

I will study more for my GPA

I would double check the outcome of my petitioned transfer courses, because they changed half way through and I took classes for no reason which made me less motivated.

I would have taken more notes in lectures and attended every class.

I would join many more study groups. I would pick better teachers from

I would like to have had above a 3.0

I would like to spend more time on my studies. I feel now that I know exactly what to expect and I've established a good group of friends I can spend more time studying.

I would not have enrolled in mgt 350. The class was too large and the grading scale was too focused on test. Worst class i have ever taken and regret my time and money spent on it.

I would practice time management better, which is what I plan to do next semester, and the rest to come.

I would spend more time in library studying.

I would study more.

I would want to have managed my time better so I would have been able to study more. I also would change my studying habits because some of the ways I studied did not worked well for some classes but for others it did.

I would have talked to advisors and teachers about how much work would be required that way I could be ahead of the game and know how much time is required.

Ideally I would like to spend less time working and more time studying if possible.

If I stay with accounting, only taking the accounting 321 course with no other courses.

In hindsight, I would probably have spent more time at office hours to clear up some of the topics that were a bit challenging for me during the semester.

It took me longer to adjust into school mode than I had expected. I missed summer too much.

Less work and more time to study

Less work, better time management.

More time dedicated to reading

My Calculus teacher, (S. Hui).

My commitment to school and studying

my study habits and time management

My study skills

My studying method that I have used until now and the testing methods I have been accustomed to are not the same as in SDSU. Before I transferred, I had only 1 B in my entire college career, and the rest were all As. In my first semester in SDSU alone, I received 3 Bs. The part I am struggling to learn is what exactly I need to do differently to change that.

Poor Professors

Some of the lectures were too broad and lacked focus in MGT350. The review sheets were just a copy of the book's entire table of contents, which is the same as telling student's they need to know everything in the book. MIS380 is what made my semester a serious struggle. That class only had one teacher and he is not fit to teach. I ended up teaching myself watching internet videos, reading a second textbook, and since he only sent projects on Saturday nights with only Monday to ask questions; I would spend my entire weekend trying to get the projects done. It was a poorly managed and run class, that seriously impacted my other classes. Had that class been taught by an instructor that was easy to understand grammatically, we had a proper textbook and not a bunch of handouts, and the content was properly taught with a clear objective, then I would have a 4.0 this semester. I have had a 4.0 for the last three years and this is the first that I may receive A- in all of my classes, except MIS380. I may receive a B or C. Nothing is calculated. He grades by feeling which is what I was subjected to when he filled out my progress form. I was excited about my major, but the content being taught for my degree doesn't meet my expectations and will not prepare me for my field. I am having serious reservations about whether this program is going to provide enough technical experience to compete. FYI; I'm a university professor and I'm teaching while attending school. When I tell you that there is an issue with a professor or format, then it's from professional experience.

Study more

study more for test

Study more, try more as well even though some of the classes I didn't care about

Study Skills

studying skills and making more time to study

Take less classes

Take more notes in class, bond with other students in my class and form a study group, study more and in advance, and visit professors during their office hours.

The professor I choose for a certain class

Time management, better study habits, make better friends in my classes

While I'm ending this semester with a C or better in all classes, I know I would have done better if I had studied differently and spent more time doing homework on my own. In the future, I will be dedicating more time to each subject in future semesters so that I earn the grades I know I am capable of achieving.

wish I would have worked a little harder

Work less hrs per day, exercise and eat better to nourish myself correctly, not try to be super woman and try to take on so many responsibilities, focus on school rather than trying to focus on career/money/business acquiring because all that will come after I finish! Focus on the now in school rather than future.
